The Federal University of São Paulo is located in the most populated and wealthiest state of Brazil: São Paulo. The State of São Paulo alone answers for over one third of Brazil’s GDP and concentrates one third of Brazilian jobs. The wealth of São Paulo reaches much further than its monetary assets; it lays in the cultural diversity that has forged its population since its beginnings. The city is a true melting pot where the Portuguese, Italians, Germans, the Jewish, the Japanese, the Chinese, Koreans, the French, Africans, Arabs, the Spanish, and Brazilians, to name a few, meet and build cities with cosmopolitan vocation. This is the environment where UNIFESP thrives as a comprehensive public university.

FACTS AND NUMBERS ABOUT UNIFESP

The Escola Paulista de Medicina (Medicine - founded in 1933) and the Escola Paulista de Enfermagem (Nursing - founded in 1939) were the first schools that in an important expansion process lead to the creation of the Universidade Federal de São Paulo in 2004.

The entrepreneurship of its faculty and staff made UNIFESP grow and become an international reference for higher education in Brazil. All undergraduate and graduate programs offered by UNIFESP are free of charge in compliance with Brazilian public higher education policy.

The University offers financial aid for those who lack the economic means to live by themselves. Graduate students are encouraged to apply for grants from several funding institutions and the success rate is close to 100%.

Undergraduate classes are offered during daytime and nighttime according to each program.
