A traditional and modern University

The Universidade Federal de São Paulo (Unifesp) has its roots in 1933 when a private medical school was founded. It became a federal institution in 1956 and a federal university in 1994. Now it holds six campuses (São Paulo, Baixada Santista, Diadema, Guarulhos, Osasco and São José dos Campos) with 53 undergraduate courses, 67 graduate programs, 1,500 faculty members, 4,000 employees and 17,000 regular students.

Unifesp is considered one of the most important education and research institutions in Brazil and Latin America. It aims at promoting the country's social, economic and technological development by means of inseparable activities in education, research and extension.

Internationalization strategy

Unifesp's internationalization strategy is framed within the context of the Institutional Development Plans for 2011-2015 and 2016-2020. From its beginning, it has been a benchmark for other universities in the country due to its reputation as a top-quality teaching and research institution. Based on dozens of cooperation agreements established in recent years with institutions from 16 different countries and the participation in programs from international organizations, as well as in those supported by the Brazilian government, the University has accelerated its internationalization process.

The establishment of strategic partnerships with institutions of highest reputation has produced research outputs of international quality in issues of global significance. At the educational level, Unifesp aims at developing internationally recognized professionals, able to engage in professional practice in a variety of contexts both within and beyond their national boundaries.
